BRIEF HISTORY OF STONINGTON GARDEN CLUB

The origins of an informal Stonington Garden Club date back to the early 1900s, but the first recorded account was July 6, 1926, when "Mrs. Frank L. Henderson won first prize in a rose contest," according to The Stonington Chronology 1649-1976. In 1929, this casual group became one of the charter members of The Federated Garden Clubs of Connecticut. During World War II, however, the Club disbanded to put its energies into knitting for troops abroad and into planting personal Victory Gardens to grow produce for residents in the UK bombed during the Blitz.

Reorganized in 1958 with 30 members, its charter was "to stimulate interest in gardening, to encourage civic planting, and to promote measures for the protection of wildflowers, native plants, birds, and wildlife." In 1996, with the active membership limited to 48 people and an unlimited number of Friends, the membership voted to change the Club's objectives: "to educate and encourage interest in the environment, conservation, civic beautification and to stimulate the knowledge and love of gardening." This is still the Club's purpose.

In 2000, the Stonington Garden Club joined The Garden Club of America, increasing membership to 55 and expanding the number of committees. In 2019, the limit on the total number of members was increased to 125.

The Club's archives are stored at Historic Stonington's Woolworth Library. The earliest periodical clippings date from 1934. Key documents have been saved in the Archives. Photographs document activities, and the volumes tell of the Club's help with the beautification of both the Town and the Borough.
